How to be an Indie Kid: A Memoir of a Boy Lost in Society George Ha

Wondering where the borderline between reality and imagination stands can make a kid go crazy. George understands this, and lives every day as if it were his last. George is a child stuck in a world where he does not understand why things are the way they are, and why he isn't living in a place where he's happy. But then again, what's the point of finding a happy place to live, when you don't even know what happiness really is? This is a story of an emotionally empty childhood. This is a story of a kid who never really had a best friend. This is the story of a kid who never sat down for a family dinner. This is the story of a kid who didn't even realize what a real family is. This is the story of what it's like to go through high school, without any real companionship, without any true love. This is the story of a boy with dreams and hopes, but having them fall to ashes over and over again. This is the story of a boy lost in a world of art and music and literature. This is the story of depression. This is his journal. This is the story of his life.
