Kids Are Dumb; Parents Are Dumber: Fast & Funny Essays on Parenthood Mark Hallen

From Mark Hallen, writer of the humor blog "The Upsizers" (<http://theupsizers.wordpress.com>): a collection of hilarious essays that will take you from the dumb things parents do when their kids are born, all the way through when they go to college. For instance: On Milestones: "What parent, a few months after the first step, has not found him or herself longing for the good old days when baby would stay right where you left her?" On Stimulation: "According to child rearing experts, it's really important to talk to your baby a lot and to keep your face very close to it. That way, it becomes familiar with your voice, hears language being used, and, at the same time, can reach up and poke you in the eye." On New Parental Nervousness: "You're sure your child will grow up to be president, or head of a major corporation, or a very talented performer if only you can get through the first few months without dropping her." On the Side Effects of 3D TV: "Parents now not only have to worry about how much TV their kids watch, but how many dimensions they're watching it in!" On Scheduling: "These days, parents are always trying to broaden their kids' horizons, shuttling them to ballet class and karate and acting classes and language classes and soccer practice. And it gets even worse when the kids are four years old." On Toilet Training: "The first step is to show your child that the toilet bowl is not what she thought it was: a small wading pool." On Paying for College: "One way to pay for it is by traveling back in time and becoming a Canarsie Indian in the year 1626 so you can sell Manhattan to Peter Minuit for $24 which, if put in a bank with compound interest would today be worth approximately 50 billion dollars, providing the bank didn't go under during the crash of 1787 and you could still find the bankbook." These essays are perfect for bathroom reading...when you're in there hiding from your kids!
