Pancakes (also called "griddlecakes", "hotcakes" or "flapjacks") are a kind of bread made on a frying pan. They are baked in different ways, such as thin French crêpes or Vermont-style multigrain pancakes. Although it is mainly called "pancake" in the English speaking countries and it is thin dough, in Mexico, it is called "hotcake" and it is often thick dough. Most pancakes are quick breads that use baking powder, although some are also made using a yeast-raised or fermented batter.

In many different places, pancakes are served as breakfast or as a dessert, and they are served with sweet sauces or toppings such as maple syrup, jam, or sugar. Pancakes are also served with savory (non-sweet) fillings and toppings such as meat. Pancakes have taken many forms all over the world, including crepes, Irish boxty, potato pancakes or latkes, Russian blini, the Welsh crempog, Indian poori, Hungarian palascinta and Dutch pannenkoeken...

While various forms of pancakes are eaten at different times of the day, pancakes have been an important breakfast item in the New World since long before the establishment of the United States. In colonial America, cornmeal pancakes were called "Indian cakes," and the colony of Rhode Island became particularly well-known for Johnnycakes, also called "journey cakes." Hotcakes made with buckwheat were called "buckwheat cakes" or simply "buckwheats." The word "pancake" seems to be more modern, not appearing in the U.S. until the late 19th century.

This short cookbook was designed as an introduction for beginners to the rich and fascinating world of Pancakes, especially american-style pancakes through various recipes.
