Letters From Limbo Philip C Force

Relativism, existentialism and social law through the eyes of a sometimes very different perspective. Love, beauty and optimism in a world that sometimes seems ugly and drab, if not completely prosthetic. It's only perspective. My world is the product of my senses and personal history. I had a brain tumor removed in 2004 and now often see two images where most claim to see one; so what one brain perceives is not always universal. If no two personal histories are identical then no two perspectives are exactly alike. This leaves room for interpretation of morality, God, and even reality. Come with me as I dive deep into my personal history, starting with the brain tumor removal, and resurface a better, happier person. I learn a lot about my world, but more about myself as I discover how the world is only what I make it.
